

THE ARTHUR M. BLANK FAMILY FOUNDATION • 2006 ANNUAL REPORT

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Arthur Blank and his family have a bold vision for Atlanta. It's a vision of a community that holds promise for every child; of a city with a sense of place and potential; of vital neighborhoods, rich with vibrant cultural opportunities for all. This vision is not a Utopian dream. It's grounded in the belief that every individual can make a difference and that people of good will working together toward a common goal can make an even bigger difference.

In the past 12 months, The Blank Family Foundation – working with many nonprofit, civic and public partners – has made encouraging progress in turning this vision into reality.

Today, we are helping more children in Atlanta's toughest neighborhoods and poorest circumstances get a fair start in life, by funding early learning and family support services through our Better Beginnings program. With more information, more income and more confidence, young parents like Terri Phillips, whom you'll hear from in this annual report, have been able to make better choices for their children and families.

As a high school freshman, college was not on Jerry Green's radar. He had a low grade point average and was reading and writing well below grade level. But he made such an impression on the executive director at his internship site during his involvement with the Hands on Atlanta Summer Youth Fellows Program, that she began tutoring him throughout the school year. Through this Blank-sponsored internship, Jerry also met Mayor Shirley Franklin, the Chief of Police and several Atlanta City Council members. Those relationships led to subsequent internships at a prestigious law firm during the following two summers. Now a senior in Atlanta Public Schools, Jerry is reading at grade level, applying to colleges and planning to major in political science.

Through our Pathways to Success partnership with Atlanta Public Schools and The New Schools at Carver – a formerly underperforming school that has been reinvented as five smaller centers of academic excellence – students like Jerry are gaining the skills and resources they need to go on to college and careers. New, innovative educational programs in Bluffton, South Carolina, and Phoenix, Arizona are having an equally positive impact on young lives in those communities, where we've brought together a wide range of partners all focused on the same goal.

Recognizing that every student must find his own passion and explore her own pathway to success, the foundation and the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra have partnered to create the Youth Talent Development Program (TDP) to provide African American and Latino student musicians the opportunity to join major orchestras around the country. Today, after six years in the program, TDP alum Eric Thompson is studying double bass at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. He's among 71 students who have participated in TDP since its inception in 1993. For the Blank Foundation, the Art of Change is not only about changing the city landscape with a world-class new symphony hall, but about changing lives through the arts.

A city is people and place. Where they meet – whether in a neighborhood park, a sports stadium or a symphony hall – life's memorable moments happen. Through investments in the Atlanta BeltLine – a chain of parks and trails, transportation, affordable housing and commercial development that will encircle downtown and touch 45 in-town neighborhoods – the foundation is working to ensure that as Atlanta's density continues to grow, families will be able to enjoy well-designed parks and green space right in our urban center. If we're successful, and Atlanta's Emerald Necklace becomes a reality, the health and psychological benefits will be incalculable for generations to come.

Bill Dietz, Director of the Division of Nutrition and Physical Activity, at the Centers for Disease

Control and Prevention, reminds us that in the 1800s when diarrheal disease was a major public health problem, cities created the infrastructure necessary to produce potable water. Today, lack of physical activity has contributed to our new public health concerns – chronic diseases like obesity, diabetes and heart disease. So Dietz says, “investments in infrastructures to promote physical activity may be among the most important investments cities can make in public health. Said another way, the BeltLine may be the most important public health intervention in Atlanta since the advent of potable water.”

Through the Atlanta Falcons Youth Foundation, we’re exploring other innovative approaches to the fight against childhood obesity – an epidemic in Georgia. With an initial commitment of more than $2 million, AFYF has launched and is now expanding Falcons Fitness Zones – where each day more than 4,000 kids in metro Atlanta have the chance to be physically active and learn about healthy living.

In all of these efforts, we rely on a cadre of strong nonprofit and public partners whose vision reaches far beyond the present to imagine the city we want for our children and our children’s children. At this writing, the Atlanta metro region has reached a population of 5 million – a number that is expected to double in the next 20 years. It is certain that we are on our way to becoming a big city, but can we be great?

Great cities encourage public-private partnerships to achieve important social change. They foster learning opportunities and systems of care for children. They support great parks that serve as the nexus of our social connection. They build educational systems that motivate tomorrow’s leaders to pursue learning and encourage them to stay on track to succeed in life. And they are home to artistic experiences that refresh, while adding economic and cultural vibrancy.

Great cities are all these things. And foundations, through innovative grantmaking, best practices, and true community partnership, can be important catalysts toward achieving shared community goals. Working with our partners to transform vision into reality is a role we take seriously at the Blank Family Foundation. Together we can change lives one community at a time, and in doing so, make an impact that will last well into the future.

Penelope McPhee
President

INSPIRING SPACES

The Atlanta BeltLine has captured the imagination of a city. This proposed 22-mile loop of trails, transit, and parks promises not only to connect communities, spur development, mobilize residents, and increase green space, but to redefine and transform the City of Atlanta. It's a dream that can be realized through vision, leadership, and community action.

The Blank Foundation believes in the BeltLine, and what it will ultimately create: a system of great parks in Atlanta. Our early Inspiring Spaces investments led to the plan on which the dream is built. Subsequent investments in the BeltLine have supported land acquisition, trail development, park advocacy and park improvement. Our aim is to ensure that every Atlantian can easily access parks with the proper amenities, and enjoy the social, recreational and economic benefits they provide.

The Benefits of Green Space

No major city in the nation has a smaller percentage of land dedicated to parks and green space than Atlanta. Each day the region loses another 54 acres of land to development. Critical tree coverage and wildlife habitat are affected. So are permeable surfaces that protect and purify natural drinking water. With a growing population that will likely double to seven million by 2030, it is increasingly important to plan and create the park space essential to our communities. This will not only preserve and protect land for public enjoyment. It will provide economic, environmental and health benefits that every resident needs.

The social connections parks provide are also invaluable and need to be available for adults and children all over metro Atlanta. Currently, too many neighborhoods don't have parks and other community spaces nearby. We are working to reshape this reality through our involvement in projects like the BeltLine; our partnerships with The City of Atlanta's Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs Department; and park advocacy groups like Park Pride.

Realizing the BeltLine Dream

Our involvement in the BeltLine's development is part of a larger community partnership effort to expand green space in Atlanta. As one of the initial funders of the Emerald Necklace Study, the Foundation has enthusiastically supported the BeltLine idea. We've since provided funds to help acquire land along the corridor, create trails that will connect the parks, and build advocacy groups who will maintain the parks in their neighborhoods.

With the full support of Atlanta's Mayor Shirley Franklin and the City Council, the BeltLine continues to gain momentum. The acquisition of the Bellwood quarry is a prime example. When converted into Westside Park, this property will become a mega-park totaling more than 350 acres of green space. The City has also purchased nearly 160 acres of other future park land along the BeltLine route. To date, 50 development projects totaling $1.6 billion are already in progress along the BeltLine, pushing the city's projected tax base from $110 million to approximately $180 million.

Two entities are now working to develop the 25-year project. The newly established Atlanta BeltLine Inc., chartered through the Atlanta Development Authority, is charged with the overall implementation and management of the project. The BeltLine Partnership serves as the public-private arm, tasked with continuing to facilitate BeltLine advocacy and engage the private sector in fundraising efforts for Atlanta BeltLine Inc., the PATH Foundation, and the Trust for Public Land.

Restoring and Improving Parks

As part of our strategy to increase public access and use of parks, we have helped fund improvements at six parks in close proximity to the BeltLine. Five are neighborhood parks in lower-income communities that already had unique momentum growing through the engagement of residents; and one is considered a regional park, offering recreational opportunities for all to enjoy.

Funds totaling $850,000 were provided to Emma Millican Park, a 9.73 acre park in south Atlanta's Capitol View Manor neighborhood. The six-acre Chosewood Park in southeast Atlanta received $385,000, while in the heart of the Vine City community, $550,000 in Foundation funds are being used to develop the new one-acre Vine City Park in a neighborhood currently deficient in park space.

We have also invested in the creation of trails in the 6.3-acre Adair I Park in Southwest Atlanta and in the 7.9-acre Daniel Stanton Park located south of Turner Field in Peopletown. Both parks will now offer easier access to the communities around them.

Piedmont Park is the preeminent park in our community. A vital and frequently used green space, it has become a central meeting space for walkers, runners, bicyclists, and concert-goers. The Piedmont Park Conservancy is dedicated to keeping the original vision for the park alive and beautiful through restoring, maintaining and reclaiming enjoyable parklands. A $5 million challenge grant from the Foundation is helping to restore the park's lower meadow and Park Drive woodland areas, reclaiming 11 acres of land parallel to the proposed BeltLine.

Creating Park Advocates

Parks don't thrive without people. Grassroots-level support – built through community advocates such as our partner, Park Pride – is essential to developing and restoring the city's smaller neighborhood parks. Throughout Atlanta, Park Pride is encouraging neighborhoods to form "Friends Of" groups to actively create the kinds of parks they want to enjoy with their children, families and friends, building an army of concerned and involved residents one neighborhood at a time. To date, more than ten parks are in some stage of re-development and 15 new "Friends Of" groups have been established. Park Pride also held a park design clinic in 2006 to help community residents determine the potential of their neighborhood park.

Connecting Communities

The BeltLine project promises to connect 45 diverse communities with 22 miles of green space, trails and transit. Unifying a city with some disconnection along economic and racial lines, the project will bring inspiring spaces close to people who couldn't access them before. Trails will invite walking, running, and cycling throughout the neighborhoods' green spaces. In addition to promoting healthier lifestyles, they also promise to increase real estate values and help revitalize surrounding neighborhoods.

We have contributed $1.5 million through the PATH Foundation to construct five new trail segments that will either connect residential areas and parks to the BeltLine or run along the corridor's right-of-way. PATH has constructed nearly 95 miles of trails in the metro Atlanta area since its founding in 1991. It is currently engaged in a joint campaign with The Trust for Public Land and The Beltline Partnership to raise funds to support the additional trails needed for the BeltLine loop.

BETTER BEGINNINGS

Ideally, every child's early learning and development should flourish in a safe, nurturing environment. For the most vulnerable among us, our youngest residents, obstacles beyond their control often prevent that from happening. Too many children are challenged by lack of opportunity, lack of resources and distressed environments. These factors can contribute to poor birth outcomes, inadequate preparation for school and learning, and in some cases, violence or neglect at home. All affect a fragile child's chances for success in life.

Through Better Beginnings, we invest in partners that seek to strengthen the learning and caregiving environments for children from birth to age five, and help families build the financial resources they need to better provide for their children. Our focus is improving the effectiveness of services, and mobilizing local and state leaders through our involvement with policy driven efforts such as The Mayor's Taskforce on Early Care and Education; the Early Learning Commission and Voices for Georgia's Children.

Quality Childcare is Critical

In Georgia, 20 percent of children live in poverty. Growing up in such environments can cause children to fall behind substantially in language and social skills, and suffer a higher risk of neglect and abuse when their families are facing financial and social obstacles. Because more than 400,000 Georgia children are in out-of-home care during the day, the early influence of programs that focus on the development of the skills and environments necessary for young children is critical to their long-term productivity in life. High-quality early learning programs are too few, and can serve only a small portion of children from disadvantaged backgrounds. But children who have quality child care are 26 percent more likely to graduate from high school and lead successful lives. Georgia has shown it believes in the importance of addressing these needs by leading the nation in introducing universal pre-K, a program that has been providing free access to preschool education through lottery funding since 1995. The state now has 56 percent of eligible four year olds enrolled. Every dollar invested in these kinds of early education programs can save the state up to $17 in future remedial education, welfare and prison costs.

But quality care can't only be centered in child care centers and schools. Ninety percent of a child's brain development occurs before the age of three. It is important that a child's early care givers – parents, grandparents, and other family – have the information and resources to provide what every child needs. Families are our first line of defense. It is critical that they are supported in educating and advocating for children. Our partners continue to innovate and push the emergence of more opportunities to support our children, so they begin their lives with the tools they need to make a positive impact on our society.

The Five Protective Factors

The Center for the Study of Social Policy has developed a promising approach to working with families through the early care and education environment. The Strengthening Families initiative reinforces existing childcare programs with strategies designed to help prevent abuse and promote optimal child development. The approach is based on five “protective factors” – supports and best practices that improve effective parenting, even for families under stress. These affordable, doable, small-scale strategies enhance child development and family well-being.

We have led the charge to introduce Strengthening Families to Atlanta by incorporating the protective factors into our strategic plan; and bringing early childhood organizations and funders together to learn more about this innovative approach and explore ways to pursue our common interest.

In 2006, we invested $450,000 to support mini-grants to a network of childcare providers implementing Strengthening Families and other program improvements. The funds will assist more than 30 programs with regular training opportunities and the latest information on best practices for child care. Through partnerships with the Georgia Children's Trust Fund Commission and Georgia Center for Children, participating organizations also receive additional professional development and expanded service. These efforts make Atlanta's Strengthening Families network the first of its kind, and a possible national model for other cities.

Expanding Early Learning Opportunities

Every moment is a learning opportunity for a young child. That's the inspiration for Born Learning, a United Way campaign that helps turn everyday occurrences into learning experiences. In 2006, we provided a $135,000 grant to assist the Black Child Development Institute (BCDI) in implementing Born Learning in the faith-based community, natural partners for strengthening family relationships. BCDI worked with local church and faith institution staff to create parenting workshops focused on increasing awareness and knowledge of early learning.

The Foundation also partnered with Jumpstart Atlanta, an organization that recruits and trains college students to mentor children. Our funding helped expand this innovative early education program to reach underserved communities in Vine City and West End. Jumpstart members will work with preschool children in small groups to improve language, literacy, social and emotional skills. The organization will also design training curriculum for the teaching staff in early education centers.

Supporting Families

If parents and other caregivers have the knowledge, skills, and resources to care for children at their earliest stages in life, we have a better chance of giving them the vital nurturing and support they need. We are focused on environments that facilitate healthy growth and development for all children, in all types of families. The Georgia Campaign for Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention's (G-CAPP) Doula Project aligns well with our goal. Doulas are extensively trained women from the community who support expectant teen mothers. Services provided by these paraprofessionals include stress management, life-skills and parenting training, prenatal support, and follow-up care for mother and baby. Our funding in 2006 helped expand the Doula project through increased funds for: marketing and outreach; Doula recruitment and hiring; expanded training; and long-term evaluation of clients and infants.

The Census Bureau's 2005 American Community Survey estimates that more than 93,000 grandparents in Georgia are raising grandchildren on their own. Often, they assume this responsibility due to the death, hospitalization, or incarceration of the child's parents. This is a specialized group with special needs. Project Healthy Grandparents (PHG), established at Georgia State University in 1995, provides health, social, and community services to this unique population. The Foundation's funding in 2006 assisted PHG in expanding its Early Childhood Intervention Program, which screens children from birth through age five for developmental delays. The program also provides monthly home visits by an Early Intervention Specialist who monitors progress and works with grandparents to build an environment that effectively supports each child's developmental needs.

Increasing Family Resources

Poverty is the greatest threat to a child's well-being. For the average family, costs of housing, child care, health care, and transportation have been growing faster than their income. For families with lower incomes, life is a struggle to stay afloat. We believe that helping these families succeed in the workforce and optimize their financial resources can reduce poverty and nurture their children's success in life. Our strategy is to build assets for working families by connecting them with the resources and information they deserve. Two web-based programs, EarnBenefits and One Economy, are leveraging our support.

EarnBenefits applies leading technology to help low-income families access available benefits such as free tax preparation, the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), Child/Dependent Care Credit, Food Stamps, and Medicaid through community providers. Our 2006 investment, along with Annie E. Casey Foundation funding, significantly expanded the program through a partnership with the Atlanta Workforce Development Agency. Now nearly 4,000 individuals can be screened for services, giving eligible families the financial assistance they need to build stable, better environments for their children. EarnBenefits is also available through the United Way of Atlanta, Sheltering Arms, the Center for Working Families, and two branches of the YMCA. Seedco (the Structured Employment Economic Development Corporation), a national nonprofit intermediary, created the EarnBenefits technology. Since it started Atlanta operations in 2004, over $750,000 worth of benefits have been accessed by Atlanta clients.

We also invested in the launch of One Economy's Beehive Atlanta, a bilingual website that links area families to a wealth of local and national information. This single online destination includes financial, housing, employment, education, health, and child care information. The program also allows families to connect with many other Foundation partners. These include the Next Step program, Prevent Child Abuse Georgia, Atlanta Public Schools, the Atlanta Housing Authority, Quality Care for Children, and Smart Start. With content in English and Spanish, the virtual gathering place targets Atlanta neighborhoods with disproportionately high percentages of low-income families with young children. Funds also expanded the Digital Connectors program, providing computer assistance to neighborhood families through technically trained young people.

PATHWAYS TO SUCCESS

The divisions between black and white and rich and poor begin almost at birth in our country. Their persistence has created an achievement gap in American high schools that costs us a substantial social and economic price. Our youth, particularly in urban schools, are lagging behind in high school and college completion rates; standardized scores; and English and math skills. This low achievement in students will eventually cause higher unemployment, lower earnings, and in some cases, an increased dependence on welfare and other social services. If we don't intervene, many students' dreams of moving on to college and entering the workforce will be narrowed, deferred, or even eliminated. We believe every young person deserves the kind of education that promises a future free from restriction. Providing all students the academic enrichment, preparation, and access they need is an essential investment that helps young people realize their full potential.

Pathways to Success is focused on expanding opportunity for youth in Atlanta, Georgia; Bluffton, South Carolina; and Phoenix, Arizona by supporting programs that give students the tools they need for success. Through investments in postsecondary readiness, we hope to be a catalyst for reducing the achievement gap and increasing high school and college graduation rates. Our goal is to help open the doors of opportunity to all young people.

Narrowing the Achievement Gap

According to The National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education's latest report Measuring Up 2006, the likelihood of Georgia ninth graders enrolling in college has declined by 10 percent since 1992, a record that gives Georgia one of the worst rankings in the country. Recent test results from the National Assessment of Educational Progress show that only 35 percent of American 12th graders are proficient in reading and 23 percent are proficient in math. This is a level of underperformance in educating young people that could over time decrease our access to a competitive workforce and, ultimately, weaken Georgia's economy.

Even when students are successful in graduating and receive the financial aid available, the cost of sending a child to community college for a year is 49 percent of an average family's income, a challenge for low to moderate income students. This economic disparity also affects diversity at higher education institutions, prohibiting young people from higher poverty levels from enjoying the academic opportunity they deserve. Slowly, Georgia is narrowing the substantial college enrollment gap between students. We must continue to look for ways to improve these numbers, and essentially, give every student a chance.

Preparing Students for Life Beyond High School

Preparing students for the rigor of college and career is critical. So is building the confidence to apply to schools and graduate with a degree. In Atlanta, we are participating with several higher education partners in supporting young people who attend The New Schools at Carver. Our grants help give students access to resources and services they need for life beyond high school.

A $900,000 grant awarded to Emory University is supporting our postsecondary education goals through professional development for teachers; and academic enrichment and tutorial programs for students. Students in the School of Health Sciences and Research are gaining specialized learning experience in health research, internships, and mentoring opportunities. Students explore the collegiate environment first-hand and focus on critical thinking, biology, chemistry and calculus skills through participation in the Emory Preparatory Research Education Program, a six-week residential program.

A $500,000 investment in the Georgia Institute of Technology's Center for Education Integrating Sciences, Math and Computing (CEISMC) created a partnership with The New Schools at Carver. As a result, students in Carver's Schools of Technology, Health Sciences and Research, and School of the Arts now benefit from academic tutorial, mentoring, and math and science themed clubs.

Through an $181,000 grant, Georgia State University students serve as mentors and tutors to Carver's Early College students, offering assistance with pre-algebra, algebra and study skills. They also participate in chess and the Academic World Quest, an academic competition designed to increase awareness of international affairs.

Increasing Graduation Rates

With an emphasis on moving students toward high school graduation and college, Project GRAD has become one of Atlanta's most successful public-private partnerships. The organization is one of the Foundation's lead partners in postsecondary readiness programming at The New Schools at Carver. Utilizing a grant of $745,000, Project GRAD completed Phase II of the Keeping the Promise campaign, which provides support for postsecondary programs that include college tours, tutoring, and visiting professors.

Partners like Project Grad have helped increase the number of Carver students taking Advanced Placement courses, and the number of juniors and seniors passing required graduation exams.

Opening Doors to Higher Education

College completion and retention rates remain uneven among students from different socio-economic backgrounds. Universities across the nation want to increase access to high quality education by identifying “non-traditional” students from diverse backgrounds. However, many schools using traditional evaluation methods continue to miss strong and capable students. Even when these students are recruited, the campus climate often feels foreign and unwelcoming. The Posse Foundation strives to open a collegiate world normally closed to such students. The program recruits, trains and awards scholarships to non-traditional young leaders. Based on a simple support team concept, student groups (or Poses) are sent to institutions ranked in the nation’s top 10 percent. The Poses are expected to support each other as they advance through the normal challenges of college life to graduation.

Posse, which began in 1989, has sites in Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, New York City and Washington, D.C. Our $860,000 investment in the program has attracted funding from other local community resources to launch a new Posse site in Atlanta, increasing access and college enrollment for Atlanta Public School students.

Training Young People for Success

The Atlanta Workforce Development Agency’s Youth Program provides internships, scholarships, and other training to assist students with college or certified technical training enrollment. A highlight of each program year is Mayor Shirley Franklin’s visit to each high school in the Atlanta Public School System to meet with seniors, personally recruiting program participants and discussing the importance of education past high school.

Throughout the program year, students are offered one-on-one sessions with the Mayor, SAT preparation, college fairs, workshops, and counseling for career and college. In addition, students receive job readiness training that includes resume writing and interviewing skills, ultimately placing 300 to 400 students at internships in local government, nonprofit, and corporate sectors annually.

Blank Family Foundation funding of $350,400 supports these programs and services, equipping young people with the career training and continuing education opportunities that can help them gain greater success in life after high school.

Building a Support Structure

We continue to fund Carl Hayden Community High School Pathways to Success programming in Phoenix, Arizona. The largest high school in the Pathways initiative, now famous for its national award winning robotics team, is majority Latino. Every program we fund at the school translates between two cultures. An intensive ESL (English as a Second Language) course is being offered during the summer months to help students strengthen their English skills. Chicanos por La Causa, a statewide community development corporation, creates internship opportunities for students based on their career interests. There is also a Family Resource Center, provided by the Arizona’s Children Association, for parents and guardians of Carl Hayden’s students, providing information ranging from standardized test registration and college preparation to adult ESL courses.

We continue our national partnership with the FIRST (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology) program to support the high school’s robotics team, teaching math and science principles as well as teamwork and leadership skills. Through a grant to Maricopa Community Colleges Foundation, Carl Hayden students are also offered the opportunity to earn college credit before their high school graduation through the ACE (Achieving a College Education) program.

Empowering a Community

Our programming at Bluffton High School on the South Carolina coast, through funding to the Community Foundation of the Lowcountry, is directly connected to the needs in this relatively small community made up of a diverse student population. Here, we focus on the social and emotional development of Bluffton students through out-of-school activities at the Boys and Girls Clubs of the Lowcountry designed around five core areas: character and leadership development, education and career development, health and life skills, the arts and sports, and fitness and recreation. We also partner with Strive to Excel to provide students with test preparation, essay writing, transitional support, college preparation, and trips to colleges and cultural institutions in South Carolina, North Carolina, and Georgia.

Students are encouraged to move to a higher education institution after high school through early connections to the local colleges in Bluffton. The University of South Carolina Beaufort gives interested students the opportunity to receive credit for the school's Early Childhood Education Bachelor of Arts degree program. The school also offers a Family University course that provides information on the college application and financial aid process to parents and guardians. The Technical College of the Lowcountry's Early College Credit Opportunity (ECCO) offers students up to 18 college credits toward a General Education Certificate. These programs not only give students a feel for college life, they also take some of the cost burden off of their families by reducing some of the credit hours needed to graduate.

ART OF CHANGE

Imagine children with compelling, customized educational opportunities. Imagine a city bountiful in cultural experience and appreciation. Imagine a center rich with music and art as a catalyst for change.

The arts are an invaluable part of our human experience. They define who we are as people. They color our culture, our understanding, even our beliefs and values. But the arts also give us a sense of community and a broader education. And they can be the foundation for building a more vital and revitalized region, the stimulus for generating income, jobs, tax revenue, and greater visibility. A city is defined by its cultural vibrancy. Great cities have strong, diverse arts organizations and cultural opportunities.

Through our Art of Change initiative, we are focused on contributing to making the arts available to all Atlantans. Our first step is supporting the creation of a world-class center that will be the home of the Grammy-award winning Atlanta Symphony Orchestra. The space will serve as a venue for a wide range of music performances and a hub for music education.

Advocating for the Arts

The arts can be used as a vehicle to revitalize and bond communities, giving people shared cultural experiences and addressing social issues. Cultural events and festivals, museums, and arts performances help us understand each other and connect with the world around us. Joining forces, we can build a community that supports, nurtures, and values the arts.

We are focused on being a catalyst in driving metro Atlanta's attention toward the arts. Foundation Chairman Arthur Blank chairs the ASO's capital campaign. President Penelope McPhee served as chair of the Mayor's Arts & Culture Funding Task Force, which recommended public funding mechanisms that might provide more support of the arts in Atlanta. Foundation trustees serve on various boards including the Woodruff Arts Center, the Alliance Theatre, the Metropolitan Atlanta Arts & Culture Coalition, and the Metropolitan Atlanta Arts Fund.

Fostering New Talent

As an educational tool, the arts engage students and create new opportunities to make subject matter personally relevant. Students who use artistic approaches to school curriculum engage their analytical and evaluation skills; and develop more creative thinking. Including the arts as part of a school's educational curriculum improves academic and test performance, specifically increasing math, science and reading scores. Also, if students excel in an artistic form, the training they receive paves the way for career opportunities in the arts industry.

Our investment in The Atlanta Symphony Orchestra's Talent Development Program (TDP) is one way we are assisting students in their artistic development. One of the TDP's underlying goals is to enable the recruitment of more culturally diverse members for symphonies across the country. The program provides students with individual instruction, mentoring, and group activities to prepare them for advanced study and eventually, future careers in music. The TDP also includes students and families in ASO events and performances in order to expand outreach. An example is the 2006 performance by TDP cellist Malcolm Parson in a post-concert reception honoring world-renowned pianist Andre Watts.

Envisioning a Symphony Center for Everyone

The quality of life in a community automatically improves when there is an arts presence. Community development increases. Revenue is generated for businesses surrounding the arts venues, and these venues provide employment opportunities. The arts have been critical to revitalizing decaying communities in cities such as Philadelphia and Charleston, SC. In some cities, creating arts districts has become the centerpiece of combating crime and suburban flight. The arts are also increasingly important to businesses, both in terms of locating their companies and attracting key employees. Company heads recognize that the arts rank high in quality-of-life considerations.

Could a single building revitalize a community; increase revenue for the county, state and city; and create an estimated 6,200 jobs? Could a facility provide an acoustic venue that would make musicians around the world envious? Could it offer community indoor and outdoor performance spaces that draw audiences during the day and into the night? Create a Learning Center with distance learning technology, continuing education for teachers, and master classes by experienced artists? Designed by Santiago Calatrava, the ASO's proposed Symphony Center could. And in the process, it could jumpstart the Atlanta community in moving towards becoming a great city. To make this vision a reality, public dollars are needed. Our investment of $35 million reinforces our belief in the project's importance to the Atlanta arts community, and the estimated $4.1 billion it could generate for the city, county, and state.

ATLANTA FALCONS YOUTH FOUNDATION

The Atlanta Falcons Youth Foundation awards approximately $2 million in grants annually, making it one of the most active foundations in the National Football League.

Established in 1985 to serve as the philanthropic arm of the Atlanta Falcons, the foundation focuses on youth fitness and supports organizations serving youth throughout Georgia. Since Arthur Blank acquired the Atlanta Falcons in 2002, AFYF has grown to be the largest team-funded foundation in the National Football League, providing $9.6 million in grants to nonprofit organizations across the state.

To address Georgia's high youth obesity rate, the AFYF launched the Falcons Fitness Zones in 2005, committing nearly $3 million to the YMCA, YWCA and Boys and Girls Clubs in metro Atlanta and Gainesville, Georgia. Funding goes to programming that promotes physical fitness and healthy eating at 18 sites operating across five Fitness Zones, reaching nearly 12,000 youth. Several of the sites are located within a one-mile radius of the Georgia Dome.

MOUNTAIN SKY GUEST RANCH

Led by staff, the Mountain Sky Guest Ranch Fund is focused on youth services, intercultural understanding, and the environment, needs identified as particularly important in Gallatin and Park counties in Montana. In 2005, the fund surpassed $1 million in grants awarded since being formed in 2003.

2006 GRANTS

Listed below are $23,273,793 in new grants approved during 2006 by the Arthur M. Blank Family Foundation.
